Having personally trained over 2,000 graduates in his popular Internet Marketing Bootcamp program in Singapore, Malaysia, Indonesia and Japan, Fabian has mastered the art of teaching complete newbies and seasoned marketers alike how to start an online business from the comfort of their homes.

Your Questions:

Q1) I'm a college student and will graduate in about two years time. I want to make internet business my source of living. How can the "average Joe" get started online? (asked by Dey Irfan Adianto)

Benjamin Marc Wee: If you are serious about going online and creating a serious retail business, I would suggest that you go to eBay as the first step. Find a niche that you know something about as that will help in product descriptions and you will enjoy the process better. Many people have started from there and become successful.

You do not have overheads like rental, staff or storage, all of that is taken care of online. Anybody on an average salary can start one business on every pay day. Some of the things you can do to draw customers and make your store different is give them, your buyers, discount coupons or bundle shipping together to make it attractive.

Do it as a business, not a hobby, and be serious about customer service. I provide a telephone number that you can call if you have questions. Mix around with people in the industry that you want to be in as that will accelerate your learning curve. So, if you are interested in eBay, you should look me up!

Q2) With everybody trying to succeed fast in the Internet affiliate marketing niche, how can I make myself stand out in the crowd? (asked by Steven Leong)

Ewen Chia: You need to find products that solve problems. There is no point selling a product that has a fantastic website but doesn't solve any problems. If people don't see a need to buy it, you'll find yourself hitting a brick wall. The merchant should also have a website that has a good selling process – like good sales copy to convert people, testimonials, product images and is redible by listing contact information.

The number one key to being a good affiliate marketer is your ability to communicate your message well. The Internet is an informative media so you need to provide information. That is the easiest way to sell. You must be able to write clearly and be good at generating content. You don't have to write your own content as you can outsource. But you have to be able to present a clear marketing message. Content is the foundation of all Internet businesses.

In order to stand out as a good affiliate marketer and earn consistent income, you need to protect your reputation. You need to come across as someone who looks out for their customers. This is the mindset all affiliate marketers should have. Act like a Big Brother and take an authoritative stance. Lastly, marketing is creativity and the more creative you are, short of being silly, the more outstanding you become and the more results you get.

“Now you can join super affiliate, Ewen Chia, as he takes you on a guided tour of his most profitable web sites. He painstakingly dissects his lucrative web sites, section-by-section, highlight-by-highlight, and point-by-point for you, so you can turn around and apply it to your own moneymaking web site.”

Q3) I want to build a list, but I'm so overwhelmed by the technical stuff (which I have no experience with). Can you recommend any short cuts? (asked by Max Colthrap)

Jaz Lai: Start with a web page called a 'squeeze' page or lead capture page. Capture the information of the visitors to your website by getting them to register or opt-in.

My favorite method is video, where I create a series of videos and post them on YouTube and other video sites. These videos will have a link pointing viewers to my 'squeeze' page. I also record my content on audio and post them on podcasting sites like iTunes with my website address at the end of the audio to point people there. I also do article marketing, which is very effective for branding. I write a 300 to 500 word article with my website address at the bottom, post it to article marketing websites and direct readers back to my 'squeeze' page.

Social networking sites are also good options to build a list. Personally, I use Facebook and Myspace. Last but not least, do joint ventures (JVs) where you promote someone else's products and vice versa. JVs have helped me build a huge list within a very short period of time.

Q4) I've got my product ready to go, but nobody knows who I am. How can I convince people to buy when I'm not famous? (asked by Louisa Ng)

Patric Chan: It's all about understanding the niche. You can only find the market if you understand it properly. There are two components here - the first is market profitability. This determines if there is a buying market for your product. The second thing is market reachability. In layman terms, this means where your traffic source is.

If you want to know whether the market is profitable, you need to know your traffic source. For example, if the traffic source is from Google Adwords, I'll search for my keywords in Google and when there are ads, I'll know that there is a demand for that market. If there are five ads, I'll know that I have five competitors and that the market is profitable. You can also monitor how long the ad is running. If it is still running after seven days, I'll know that the company is making money and that the market is profitable. From there, I can also monitor how my competitors do their marketing.

If you are selling information products on the Internet, my guideline is to provide 5x the value in return. You should always remember this when you are creating a product. Most of the things on the Internet are transparent - you can see what your competitors are offering on their websites and what people are doing online. Understand your business model so that you can research for what you want to know. Whether someone buys from you depends on your value intensity. If your value intensity is high, then people will buy from you.

Q5) What, in your opinion, is the best way to get traffic to your blog for free? (asked by Max Gan)

Alvin Phang: There are more than 77 ways to drive traffic to your blog. My top three would be joint ventures (JVs), article writing and forums. Firstly, for JVs, work with someone more popular than you. One way to do this is to ask for an interview. For example, I interviewed popular blogger, John Chow, and when my interview was published on his website, it drove traffic to my blog.

For the second method, article writing, people used to write one article and post that to hundreds and thousands of article directories. That doesn't work anymore. What you should do is post three to four articles consistently every week to a few popular article directories.

Third, use forums to drive traffic and go to forums related to your market. I go to www.warriorforum.com, an Internet marketing forum and I go there very often to get people in that forum to view my blog.

Q6) Is it true that you can make millions from membership websites? (asked by Helen Lee)

Ian Del Carmen: Yes, that is possible. I am an example of someone who has done it. When I got married at the age of 23, I had no money. I was working in TV production and every month, my salary was never enough. That time, I was just an employee at a TV station earning about US$600 a month. When I made my first sale and my very first member joined by sending me $27 for the first month, I thought, if I can get one new member every single day for the next 30 days, I would earn US$810 a month which is higher than my salary as an employee!

So I focused on my goal and pushed hard to get 30 members for my very first membership site. From then on, I harnessed the Internet to pay me US$810 month after month... until I managed to build a company making millions every year! Just like that, step-by-step.

What I always do is give out a $1 trial for seven days or even for one full month, after which, the regular monthly membership fee charges start after the trial period. This model gives a membership site owner an expectable recurring monthly income. Right now, I have more than 200 company-owned membership sites and hundreds of users who resell my membership sites through www.MembershipWholesaler.com and use my membership site system at www.Memberfire.com.

Q7) I recently launched a new web site and submitted it to the search engines, but haven't received the first visitor. Is there something I'm missing here? (asked by Michael Teoh)

Fabian Lim: The process of being found by Google is known as 'indexing'. This process is called on-page optimization, which means that you are optimizing your page or website for relevancy for a key phrase. For more competitive key phrases, let's say, 'cheap electric guitars'. You will need to obtain a higher level of relevancy. Google has a system that is able to assess how relevant, or authoritative your website is, and it uses an internal algorithm known as PageRank. Page Rank is the measure of how authoritative each page or document within its database is. When you have a link from an outside source pointing to a page on your website, that, in Google's eyes, is a vote. Generally, the more votes the better. Now, it is no more just quantity votes, which is the number of links you get back (link popularity), but the quality of the votes that you have (link reputation). Content is important, but I want to introduce you to a new concept called context. Content refers to the words on the page, while context refers to the association of the words in the page. The good news today is that Google's algorithm is very sophisticated and it will recognize you as an industry expert. For example, a doctor writing an article on colon cleansing will not need to do anything more other than describe accurately, in his own words, whether colon cleansing is necessary, and believe me, Google will recognize that content and give it maximum visibility in the search engine because it is written by an expert - and therefore is viewed as an authoritative article.

Q8) I would like to market on the Internet, but I have no idea where to start. Can you give me some advice on how to drive traffic through PPC? (asked by Rendy Tan)

Eugene Ang: First, you need to define the objective of your marketing campaign. Make sure that your objective is in line with the overall marketing plan and is integrated as part of the overall marketing message. If your aim is to generate leads using Internet marketing or pay-per-click marketing, but you do not have a website that can convert traffic into leads, then you are going to have a big problem because at the end of the campaign, you will not have any results despite having spent a lot of money.

The entire philosophy of Google's approach to search is on the user experience. Their aim is to give relevant results when we are searching for something, whether it is results displayed organically or results displayed on the advertisement sponsored links. What users want are relevant results so as long as your advertisements are focused on that aspect, it should be alright.
